Second one not so much, but I still enjoyed it. Mima Wilson was a recluse. She could smell the soil, felt it damp through her sweater where she must have propped herself on her elbow. Find the locations described in Red Bones on a map of Shetland. Like the first book, it didn't give me as much of a sense of the Shetlands as I would have liked. For more holiday lets? Then an elderly woman is shot in a tragic accident in the middle of the night. So is more to these murders, of course, as we learn about two feuding families, greed and an old crime. I didn't find it a real page turner like the other two, but it was good .
