Lists What are lists? Since money was scarce in the colonies and their trade was paralysed by imperial restrictions the British Government was warned that it must pay the enormous cost of unrestricted Irish immigration. The callous mentality of the British Cabinet is reflected in the attitude of Sir Robert Peel, who, at the beginning of the Famine imposed a new coercion law on Ireland:

This single location in Australian Capital Territory: In the years following the Atlantic Migration the influence of the Irish press greatly increased. However the Irish presence in Canada can be dated even earlier than the arrival of Aubrenon.

the most critical years of the famine, Ireland exported, at their insistence, corn, barley, oats, and cattle in quantities that would have sufficed to feed the famine-stricken population.
