My parents, maybe because they were forty years old when I was born, became immigrants. None of it stopped her from pursuing a better life. My parents in a number of ways embody the divide that exists in this country in regards to immigrants and minorities. Three Extraordinary Women's Stories by Pamela Ferris-Olson gives a unique look into the lives and history of three minority women.

Wow this is a great resource. At the age of twenty-seven, with a wife, two young children, and a job, she has worked tirelessly for two decades to overcome poverty, and to rise to the challenges of raising two sons in a world that has preconceived notions about black males. I owe it to them to see their stories are told so others might benefit.
